An official prologue titled "Into the Abyss" was shown theatrically prior to the release of "Kong: Skull Island. Mark Schultz, a human known as the "Admiral" of the U.S. Navy's Monarch Program, approaches billionaire Oliver Lynton-Wolfe, CEO of Lynton Industries, with a proposition that puts him in permanent risk. He explains to him that the company lost their first expedition to Skull Island and if they can find and return samples, they will be allowed to go back and establish a base on the island. This incredibly risky plan is set into motion as their boat arrives on Skull Island; however, they soon learn something is wrong on the island as the natives exhibit more hostility toward them than usual. Three scientists (Bill Randa, Houston Brooks, and San Lin) are accompanied by the U.S. Army Regiment accompanying them to Skull Island in 1973, where they are investigating the island that has never been discovered before. They are being followed by both the Monarch team led by Schultz with a submersible under his command along with helicopters led by Lieutenant Colonel Preston Packard and his soldiers who wish to rescue any survivors of the recent encounters on Skull Island. The two parties soon enter a violent conflict between both human teams which ends with the destruction of all aircrafts with both groups retreating to land on opposite sides of the island.
